HOW MAD DOG AND THE KID SECRETLY FILMED ABSCAM

Even the FBI couldn't figure out how two controversial journalists helped break the story of the agency's sting

By John Weisman

They're called Mad Dog and The Kid at NBC.

Ira Silverman, 44, is Mad Dog, although, with his worried, wrinkled forehead and sad puppy eyes, the hound-like look leans more toward Huckleberry than Baskerville. The Kid is Brian Ross. At 31, Ross's undernourished appearance and wet-behind-the-ears demeanor telegraph no threats, no hidden strengths. In a crowd, you'd notice neither.

You'd be dead wrong. Because Mad Dog and The Kid are reporters with a mission. They're NBC's white knights, out to get the bad guys. Just listen to a few testimonials from the subjects of their reporting: William "Jackie" Presser, a Teamsters official from Cleveland and a Silverman/Ross subject, calls them "journalistic hit men." Charles "Chuckie" O'Brien, long known as James Hoffa's "foster son," says of Ross: "Personally, I think he's a bum."

Jack Valenti, once an aide to President Lyndon Johnson and now head of the Motion Picture Association of America, says he was "hauled before a grand jury" as a result of a Silverman/Ross report about movie-company payoffs to corrupt unions and organized crime. Valenti calls the report "a travesty of justice."

Of course, they have their fans, too. Jim Drinkhall, investigative reporter for The Wall Street Journal, calls Ross and Silverman "first-rate." Less objective sources, too, extol their work. John Sikorski, a former member of the dissident Teamsters group PROD, now an assistant district attorney in Philadelphia, says the pair are "very gutsy. They do their homework better than anybody else."

If you don't recognize the names, maybe you will remember some of their stories. They did NBC Nightly News segments on the misuse of Teamsters pension funds and the infiltration of known organized-crime figures into the Teamsters leadership. A Brian Ross series on trucking safety brought howls of protest from both the Teamsters and the trucking industry, which filed fairness complaints with the Federal Communications Commission (they were denied). Ross and Silverman have also taken on the big oil companies. Recently, they did a report on Exxon's increased sale of high-sulphur oil in south Florida. The oil company said the report was biased, and filed a complaint with the National News Council, which ruled in Exxon's favor. Good guys don't always win.

If none of those stories strikes you as familiar, what about Abscam? This past winter, Silverman and Ross were tipped off about an FBI "sting" that involved members of Congress allegedly taking bribes from wealthy "Arab businessmen" who needed favors and were willing to pay for them. The "Arabs" were, in fact, FBI agents.

The story broke over the weekend of Feb. 2-3. NBC was not the only news organization to whom information had been leaked. The New York Times and the Long Island newspaper Newsday → also had inside stuff. But NBC, thanks to Silverman and Ross's ingenuity, had something no one else had: pictures. For four days and nights the team had staked out an FBI undercover house located on a hilly dead-end street in a fashionable Washington, D.C., neighborhood. Working out of the Four Seasons Hotel in Georgetown (Ross and Silverman were paranoid about leaks at NBC's news bureau), using crews brought in from Miami and Pittsburgh, and a pair of Winnebago motor homes, the NBC teams shot video tape of FBI agents and others moving in and out of the house at which bribes had been offered—and allegedly accepted.

NBC also staked out the homes of those implicated in Abscam. Thus, when FBI agents showed up at the home of Sen. Harrison Williams (D-N.J.) to tell him he was part of their investigation, an NBC long lens, aided by a special "Night Owl Eye" low-light attachment, caught the G-men presenting their credentials at his front door.

While the FBI had been staking out the suspects, NBC had been staking out the FBI—and the Feds never caught on. One special agent said, "It was an embarrassment for us."

How do a couple of reporters come by information like that? To be sure, Ross and Silverman aren't talking. And to be equally sure, FBI director William Webster and U.S. Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti would love to find out. An investigation to ferret out just where the leaks did occur has begun. There is talk about lie-detector tests for FBI and Justice Department employees. And a Telex was sent by FBI director Webster to his troops: Do not talk about Abscam any more.

So the lid is on. Still, some facts can be established; some conclusions drawn. And these can provide a good insight into the way investigative teams like Ross and Silverman work.

First, Ross and Silverman talk to each other a lot. They share their information. Ross is divorced and lives in New York. He likes to get up early in the morning and run. Silverman is married and lives in a Washington, D.C., suburb. He has a fondness for Fritos and macaroons. Between them, they run up big phone bills. And they don't engage in idle gossip. As Silverman says, "The first thing we do mornings is talk to each other about who we talked to last night."

Let us suppose, then, that Ross (or Silverman) was in New York sometime late last fall, having a friendly drink with a source from an unnamed law-enforcement agency. (Just for argument's sake, let's call the agency the FBI.) And during the evening, the source bragged, "Boy, do we have a great scam going."

"Oh," said Ross or Silverman. "What?"

"You know I can't tell you," said the source.

The source probably forgot that conversation. Silverman or Ross did not. Successful stories have been built upon flimsier leads. So imagine the way they might have kicked it around on the phone the next morning:

Ira: So the Feds have a scam going. Well, that's characteristic. Remember when Griffin Bell talked about going after white-collar crime, narcotics and political corruption at that U.S. attorneys' convention three years ago?

Brian: Sure. And guess who's running the FBI's New York office these days—Neil Welch.

Ira: Who went after Rep. Dan Flood in Philadelphia.

Brian: And who likes political-corruption cases and likes stings.

Ira: And who's got a staff of people around him from the Eastern District Strike Force and the Department of Justice and the FBI. . .

Brian: . . . who have a real appetite for undercover operations. →

Ira: I think we've got something here.

Now, the above conversation did not actually take place. But it might have. Ross and Silverman were aware of all the facts therein. What is known is that during several conversations with sources, they caught on that the FBI was running a scam operation. So they started talking to people in earnest.

It took a few weeks, but they found between eight and a dozen people at various law-enforcement agencies who gave them solid, if partial, information. And by Christmas time they were able to pay a holiday visit to NBC News president William Small. Small recalls: "There was this sort of beatific smile on the face of Ira Silverman as he said, 'This may be a hot one . . .'

"And I said, 'Really? It only involves six congressmen and a senator. Why would that be controversial?' "

What did Silverman and Ross know? The truth is, not much. They knew that the FBI's operation had been going for almost two years and that it ranged up and down the Eastern seaboard from New York to Florida. They knew that hundreds of thousands of dollars in bribes had been paid, and they knew that government officials, including members of Congress, were alleged to be involved.

They did not know they were not the only ones receiving information. "Until the middle of January," says Ross, "we thought we owned Abscam." Then a source told him that The New York Times was also getting information. This worried Ross and Silverman. In cases like this, breaking the story second doesn't count for much.

So they decided to take some journalistic risks and "trade up" for more information. Trading up is an old technique similar to liar's poker. What you do is talk to someone who knows everything you want to know, giving the impression that you know as much as he does. You use a lot of buzzwords and inside phrases, even if you don't know what they mean. Then you sit back and keep a poker expression on your face while the source lets you in on all the little secrets you've been trying to discover for months.

Ross and Silverman had one thing working in their favor when they decided to trade up. They knew the FBI's code word. The name Abscam itself was top security. If they knew that—they probably knew a lot more.

They could also hit their sources with an implied threat: help us or we'll go on the air with what we have and most of your case will be blown. Good guys, after all, aren't always nice guys, right?

The third week of January, Silverman and Ross pressed their sources. Then, on Jan. 30, they hit pay dirt. Although Ross denies that he and Silverman were ever leaked a document, another source says that the pair was "given access to a document with a lot of specifics." What that could have been is unclear, but the possibilities include an FBI "hit list" of suspects or a Justice Department internal memo. Whatever the case, on Jan. 30 they did discover the address of the Washington house where the FBI based its Abscam operation. A stakeout was set up at both ends of the short street, and then they called NBC Washington bureau chief Sid Davis with the news.

Davis—along with 3000 others—was at the Washington Press Club's annual Congressional Dinner. He received Ross's message on his beeper, which went off loudly. He dashed from the room—watched closely by the bureau chiefs of other news organizations.

NBC News vice president Sylvia Westerman says that just after Davis left, National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski excused himself from the head table. "The other newspeople went bananas," Westerman says. "They thought we had a scoop about Iran. But Brzezinski was just going to the bathroom. Then Sid came back and told Bill Small, who also was at the dinner, that Brian and Ira were staking out the FBI house."

Brian Ross was born in Chicago and majored in broadcast journalism at the University of Iowa. His dream, he says, "was to go back to Chicago and get a job at an O&O" (one of the five local stations owned and operated by each commercial network).

Things didn't work out that way. Ross was hired by NBC's affiliate in Miami. "It was an eye-opener. You begin to see ties between labor unions and cops and crooks and dope dealers, and you start wondering just how deep all those ties go, and what they mean, and how they affect people." After Miami, Ross went to NBC's O&O in Cleveland, where he began reporting on the Teamsters. "My news director, Dick Lobo, told me to take a look at them." That look, a five-part series, won an Alfred I. Du Pont-Columbia University award in 1975 and earned Ross the everlasting enmity of the Teamsters. Ross says that he developed a sense of outrage looking at organizations like the Teamsters. "You watch these guys misusing their members' money and it just seems so unfair. You want to expose that. You want people to know what's going on."

Ira Silverman learned about corruption growing up in Brooklyn. "My uncle was in the garment business. Some goniffs came in and said, 'You just gave us 30 per cent of your business.' That night my uncle closed the doors and walked away. He never went back. You don't forget things like that." Later, Silverman would shoot undercover film of police corruption in New York and stake out organized-crime drug dealers on Upper Manhattan's notorious Pleasant Avenue.

They were teamed in 1976. "The Kid comes along," Silverman says, "very brash, very bright." Paul Friedman, then producer of the NBC Nightly News, paired them up to do a series on the Teamsters. The folks at NBC News loved the results. The Teamsters hated the results, calling them rife with innuendo and biased. To add insult to injury, Ross and Silverman were assigned to cover the Teamsters convention in 1976. "We weren't going to give them credentials until our lawyers told us we had to," says a Teamsters official. At the convention, Charles "Chuckie" O'Brien resorted to a unique form of creative nonviolence. He stood next to Ross and Silverman with a hand-cranked siren. Every time the NBC crew switched on the sound, O'Brien cranked the siren. "Ross didn't like that," says O'Brien. "I feel that Ross's type of reporting is strictly sensationalism."

Neither Ross nor Silverman thought much about sensationalism during the Abscam stakeout. It was too cold. The orange juice they'd brought to drink froze into a popsicle. There was nothing to do but wait—and film.

The waiting was worth it. NBC had pictures when no one else did. ABC even called Sid Davis to ask for the address of the FBI house (he didn't supply it). "We were pretty damn happy," said Ross. And they were, too, despite the fact that The New York Times had much more information than NBC. "Oh, we used 90 per cent of what we had on the air," Ross admits. "They had a lot more detail."

These days, Mad Dog and The Kid are back on the exposé trail. "Abscam was pretty straightforward," says Silverman. "Working organized crime or labor stories is a lot more complex. It's a lot more demanding. You end up all over the place. Today Cleveland, tomorrow Los Angeles or Miami, or New York—you're always moving."

"People say, what a great assignment," says Ross. "You know, the expense account, the air card—"

"Yeah," says Silverman. "We got the life, right? You know what the life is? It's the phone life. It's the motel life. It's the couch life. It's the rented-car life. But hey, I'll tell you something: it's the only life." END

Getting there is twice the fun

When Texaco wants to sell motor oil, it doesn't fool around. For this commercial, in which two halves of a Chevy Citation join up in a tricky display of precision driving, the oil company called for driving-ace Janet Guthrie (above). It also called for some sidesplitting effects. Texaco wanted a strikingly graphic way to help Janet demonstrate that its motor oil delivers "engine protection up front" and "fuel economy back here." The trick was to create two half-cars that seemed to drive on two wheels—and that took some fancy engineering and slightly sneaky photography, not to mention a hidden driver in the trunk (above right). The two-wheel problem was solved by adding "training wheels" to each half of the car. (You don't see them in the commercial, though; the cameraman shot from an angle just high enough to keep them out of sight.) Two's Company, Inc., the outfit that designed this model, chose a Citation largely because of its front-wheel drive. The back half needed a few things—such as a Volkswagen engine, brakes, fuel lines, a steering system and someone to drive. No doubt Texaco could have found an easier way to make its point. But, as you see, it went for broke.

They'll play Bach backwards, run for Queen of Holland...

Anything goes as New Yorkers rise to the bait of TV stardom on their public-access channels

By Don Kowet

"I'm Coca Crystal, TV star," says the smiling Queen of New York City cable. Tonight's live edition of If I Can't Dance You Can Keep Your Revolution features a "mixed media sculptor" who "hallucinates in bed between midnight and 3 A.M., then gets up and builds his dreams."

"What's this show about?" asks a bewildered caller.

"It's about an hour," says Coca, puffing on the illegal cigarette that kindles her illegal smile. . . .

Welcome to the wacky world of New York City's public-access cable-TV, where anyone can have a television show. All you have to do is pick up the telephone and call a cable-TV company—either Manhattan Cable or Teleprompter. It's easy. You, too, can star in your own TV extravaganza. Air time on public-lease Channel J (which permits advertisements) costs only $50 per half hour; air time on noncommercial public-access Channels C and D on the cable tuners is absolutely free. On all three public channels, there → is virtually no censorship.

Who harbors secret fantasies of becoming a Fred Silverman? What programs are these Walter Mittys perpetrating?

Coca Crystal's Channel D show is a sometimes serious, more often hilarious, anthology of the '60s; its anarchist politics reflect the anarchy in her studio. A recent guest was a once distinguished, now disheveled, 73-year-old poet who fought with the Abraham Lincoln Brigade in the Spanish Civil War. He was singing "The Darktown Strutters' Ball," his rendition flawed only by the fact that no one could understand a single word he was warbling.

Coca (who formerly was a director of information for the Harris Poll) has been hijacked to Cuba and kidnaped in India. She met her former producer and former fiancé when she hired him to plop a pie in the face of a radio talk-show host named Alex Bennett. Undoubtedly, she's destined to show up on Johnny Carson's Tonight Show, doing for the 1960s what Charo has done for Spain.

Meanwhile, Dick Roffman, on public-lease Channel J, seems content just to show up. The host of Dick Roffman & Friends is a poker-faced publicity man whose typical client is the classical musician who, draped over his piano from behind, plays Bach "backwards." On his show, a roomful of preening vanity-press authors and tin-eared Carusos sprint through 15-seconds-of-glory TV spots. The oblivious Roffman shuffles some papers on his desk. He reads a magazine. One night a poet tried to recite more than his one allotted stanza. Outraged, Roffman leaped up and shoved the babbling bard off the stage.

You're not in the mood for hard corn? How about soft porn? Sheltered by what is probably the most liberal city-franchise charter in the Nation, performers on all three public channels (C, D and J) are allowed to commit almost any sexual act, and they often do. They can utter anything except outright criminal libel.

Meet the hero of The Ugly George Hour of Truth, Sex and Violence. He's George Urban, switched-on video port-a-pack strapped to his back, a leering Orpheus frantically prowling the streets of Manhattan in search of any Eurydice who'll rip off her clothes in front of his camera.

Then there's Midnight Blue, whose host, Alex Bennett (his face caught the pie tossed by Coca Crystal's former true love), narrates slick color segments such as the saga of a naked lady setting a world record of 83 (well-concealed) successive sex encounters.

Lawyers for Midnight Blue recently persuaded the Time, Inc.-owned Manhattan Cable to scrap its set of self-devised Obscenity Guidelines. The cable companies can still refuse to broadcast a hard-core pornographic program, but have to back up their decision with chapter-and-verse from specific state or Federal law. Producers merely agree not to violate the law.

Not surprisingly, some New Yorkers feel the city cable-charter is not just liberal, but downright licentious. New Yorkers who tuned in on Christmas Day, at 7:30 P.M., were horrified to see a film that showed (over and over again, for a half hour) an "artist" walking up to a little dog and actually shooting it dead in cold blood.

However, most public-access shows are completely devoid of either sex or violence. On Mondo Bozo, star Kathy O'Connell may attempt to enroll you in her write-in campaign to become Queen of Holland. ("Hey, I saw both versions of 'Hans Brinker, Or, The Silver Skates'.") Tom Leykis, on Bread and Circuses, can get you a date—or give you the home phone number of any network celebrity he finds odious. Adrian Stokes, on New York Live, chats with telephone call- → ers through their TV sets. Steve Gruberg (The Grube Tube) talks to telephone callers, too—while his phone number flashes on the screen, accompanied by the plea: "Steve needs a woman now!" Or you can watch Ferris Butler's Waste Meat News as NBC's late-night-entertainment writers apparently do, and preview Saturday Night Live skits months before they are broadcast.

Of the score or so preachers and evangelists available, the one with the strangest theology was on Hotline Ministry to God, until its recent departure. The show's high-priestess, a 40-ish blonde, once upon a time had a show called Talent Given a Chance that gave her the chance, she said, "to end my bleeding, caused by seven years of cruel silence from the relatives in Great Neck who didn't give love." Then she switched from raving about her dead sister-in-law Rita to religion, inventing a trinity in which she, New York TV-nostalgia-king Joe Franklin and the Mafia competed for control of her soul.

The theoretical reach of public-access cable in New York is close to 200,000 homes—plus another 50,000 or so homes with illegal cable hookups. How many of these hooked-up homes ever tune in?

"Our telephone surveys indicate a transient audience," says Manhattan Cable's David Earle. "Most people watch as sort of a lark, on their way from something to something else. But if you watch shows doing telephone call-ins, you'll see that certain constituencies glom onto certain personalities.'

Overall, though, it's clear that the size of any show's audience is likely to be smaller than the host's ballooning ego.

"We have isolated eight different reasons why people want to be hosts of public-access shows," says Jim Chladek, the former ABC programming executive from whose decaying studios issue 42 live programs each week, plus 10 on tape. "Some do it for vanity, some for instant ego gratification. How many reasons is that? Only one? I'll have to call you later with the other seven."

Air-time on C and D is free. The cable companies get nothing, but producers pay Chladek $20-$40 per half hour to use the production facilities he owns. They're fossil facilities: a "dressing room" more like a tenement bathroom; one or two black-and-white cameras whose scurvied legs shiver and quake whenever the generator in the restaurant downstairs begins to rumble. The stage is a raft of raw boards; guests seated at its edge who can talk for an hour without tumbling off should audition for The Great Wallendas.

Astonishingly, though, one show has managed to put on that rickety stage an armada of guests equal to any that invades the studios of Griffin or Donahue or Douglas. Joan Fontaine, Steve Allen, Hugh Downs, Stockard Channing, Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin . . . all have assisted at Nick Yanni's Tomorrow's Television Tonight.

"I'm trying to prove that you don't need such glossy production values to create a show," says Yanni, a TV critic for the New York Post. Yanni's show is a sober weekly survey of what's happening in New York City's TV, art and theater. Real journalists review real events.

And then it's time for Merry Clark, the blonde and brazen gossip columnist. Wearing chic, blue-tinted sunglasses that suddenly start blinking a ridiculous yellow, Merry explodes onto the screen, as flamboyant as any of the celebrities she pokes fun at.

"Merry is three-dimensional, and she's from Texas," says Yanni. "And she's got one more quality that makes her perfect for public-access," he adds. "Merry, in a nice way, is absolutely crazy."

No doubt about it. Phil Donahue is a regular guy. Decent sort. Dependable. Responsible. Nice. Thoughtful. Aware. He's even baldly honest about liking his money, his celebrity status, his fame and success. He admits to traits held to be unvirtuous in polite society: Aggressiveness. Cowardice. Bragging. Chauvinism. Anyone reading his book would say Phil Donahue must be a jewel of a fellow.

Somehow, though, even the valid vaunting of oneself has an arrogant ring to it. With this caveat in mind, however, it is possible to enjoy Donahue's book and admire his transformation from a provincial, narrow-minded lad to an enlightened man concerned with the important and serious issues of the day—dutifully bringing those matters before the daytime TV viewer on his syndicated program, Donahue.

Donahue examines his rigidly Catholic (but otherwise happily ordinary) childhood in Cleveland (although he did fight regularly and get beaten up plenty). From high school he went to Notre Dame, where he was a capable student but rather too high-spirited. At one point, he was threatened with expulsion. Recovering himself nicely, he worked as an announcer for a South Bend TV station and met Margie Cooney, the sister of one of his pals. She became his wife in 1958 and, subsequently, mother of his five rapidly appearing children. Announcing gave him a taste for what became his career, beginning with a job for a 250-watt station in Michigan as its program and news director—and man-on-the-street reporter. From then on, Donahue pursued the American Dream. And captured it. Or part of it.

Along the way he lost his religion. He also lost his wife. He came to realize he had totally ignored her needs while on his way to The Top. Eventually, he says, she became so unhappy that "even I noticed it."

In an agreement with his wife, after their divorce, he took their four boys to raise while she claimed their daughter. Donahue suddenly found himself in the position of the majority of America's women, trying to do a good job with the kids. His feminist consciousness, nonexistent before, grew and flowered. Now he is a sincere believer in the women's-liberation movement. It has had its rewards, among them the companionship of Marlo Thomas, an outspoken defender of women's rights, whom he'd met as a guest on his show.

In many ways, Donahue seems just too good to be true. One suspects he isn't. Artfully candid, all the while admitting weaknesses, he manages to extol himself as missionary to the underprivileged provinces (among which may be counted New York and Los Angeles). He claims to care deeply for the disconsolate in his audience, yet one suspects he cares more deeply for a lofty Nielsen rating. The biggest clue, may it be noted, is that he, a non-writer, wrote an admiring book all about himself. Doesn't that tell us all something?

NBC's Big Fall Gamble: Six Straight Nights of 'Shogun'

Hollywood—NBC president Fred Silverman is taking a big gamble. NBC, which seems to have a death grip on third place in the prime-time ratings race, has decided to risk its future next fall by opening the new season with Shogun, a 12-hour miniseries about 17th-century Japan. If Shogun outdraws its competition, the network—and Silverman—would start off with an enormous competitive advantage because millions of viewers would also be exposed to a lot of promotional spots for NBC's new shows. If the miniseries, which will be telecast on six consecutive nights beginning Sept. 14, fails to draw a crowd, the network could be buried by CBS and ABC, which are expected to mount vigorous counterprogramming attacks. The key to the success of a miniseries is the first night. If enough viewers watch the opening episode, then the following nights tend to gain in audience. But if a tune-out occurs—as happened to ABC last season when The French Connection Affair sank within minutes of launching—NBC could be crippled for the rest of the season. The network would have to suffer through five more nights of failure, and would also lose the important promotional advantage for its upcoming shows. Shogun, based on the novel by James Clavell, features Richard Chamberlain and Toshiro Mifune in the lead roles.

NBC has also announced that the Tomorrow show, the 1 A.M. one-hour talk show with Tom Snyder, will be expanded and revamped, beginning in September. The change, which coincides with the new one-hour format for The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson, will add a half-hour to Tomorrow, moving its starting time up to 12:30 A.M. Moreover, Tomorrow, which offers interviews conducted by Snyder, will now include news updates and entertainment and information features. NBC, outlining its plans to its affiliates, did not specify what role Snyder would have in the new Tomorrow. A source close to the newsman/performer said the network is currently negotiating his status.

International politics is playing an increasing role in TV's participation in the Olympics. Now that NBC has dropped its plans to cover the 1980 Moscow Games because of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the next problem may be the 1984 Winter Games in Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, which ABC is scheduled to broadcast. If political unrest develops, as a result of the death of Yugoslav strongman Marshal Tito, it could cause problems. Should trouble arise, ABC officials won't be dropping by the offices of Lloyds' of London for an insurance check the way NBC will. "Moscow ended all that," said Roone Arledge, president of ABC News and Sports. "Nobody there wants to touch the Olympics." Without Lloyds', how would ABC recover the $91 million it reportedly will pay for the Games? The Yugoslav Olympic Committee might indemnify ABC, Arledge said, or possibly a consortium of insurance companies could be arranged. Until then, ABC is

As We See It

☐ Among the nominees for daytime Emmys this year is a miniprogram "so unique and different that it does not fall into any other category or area" and therefore had to be placed in a "Special Classification of Outstanding Program Achievement."

Pretty noble language, that, for a "show" only 45 seconds long; but that is precisely the length of FYI (For Your Information), offered 15 times a week within ABC's daytime schedule.

☐ FYI looks like a commercial, but it's not. It's something quite different and a new kind of TV service. Each spot manages to pack into its brief moments a useful piece of information targeted for a specific group of adults. For senior citizens. For the newly married. For pregnant women. For parents of young children. For divorcés. Presumably, as the series progresses, for everybody.

Hal Linden appears on screen to present these quickly ingested capsules of fact and advice, each of which is a distillation of knowledge from specialists in their own fields. Linden, the pleasant, easygoing star of Barney Miller, is a happy choice for the role: he takes the didacticism out of what is essentially a presentation of textbook information. Aided by still pictures, he makes his messages palatable and interesting.

☐ Since January, some 125 "shows" have been made, offering fast but authoritative information on such varied subjects as caffeine, the Pap test, vocational education, the seven-year itch in marriage, and getting a summer job.

By now the commercial break is an American institution and we are all conditioned to having it try to sell us something—if not a product or a politician, then a broadcaster's promo to persuade us to tune in his show. So it's a welcome surprise, when you encounter an FYI spot, to realize that this time the aim is to give you an idea—to introduce you to a new fact. ABC deserves credit for this valuable (and quite natural) new use of television communication.

keeping its money in the United States.

Dallas—The hottest problem confronting the more than 7000 delegates attending the convention of the National Cable Television Association here resulted from the arrival of the new Premiere network. Premiere, a pay-TV outfit backed by Columbia Pictures, MCA Universal, 20th Century-Fox, Paramount and Getty Oil, was formed a few weeks ago. Home Box Office, Showtime and other pay-cable companies regard it as an unwelcome competitor. HBO claims that Premiere's policies violate U.S. antitrust laws. Premiere plans to show films from its four movie-company backers nine months before they are made available to competing pay-TV firms.

Premiere sent a large delegation to the convention, including Charlton Heston, who narrated a short presentation film for invited guests. After the film there was a press conference, attended by more than 100 journalists and others, some of whom were suspected of being lawyers for competing pay-TV companies. The situation made the Premiere representatives uneasy, and their nervousness was increased when many of the questions focused on legal matters. A studio representative said later, "One reporter sat in the audience with two lawyers from opposing pay-TV companies sitting beside him. The lawyers gave him questions to ask us. And one attorney taped the whole news conference." The obvious inference was that the tape-recording legalist was seeking material to use in a possible court fight against Premiere.

The list of movies on Premiere's schedule includes "The Electric Horseman," "Chapter Two," "Coal Miner's Daughter," "Kramer vs. Kramer," "All That Jazz," "The Hunter" and "The Mountain Men."

The Screening Room

Previews of noteworthy series and specials by TV GUIDE programming editors
For movie choices see 'This Week's Movies' by Judith Crist, in this section

The art of Pablo Picasso and the music of Richard Wagner share the spotlight with a drama about Benjamin Disraeli and a pair of tuneful variety hours.

SATURDAY. A rerun of Goldie and Liza Together (8 CBS) reunites Misses Hawn and Minnelli in a stylish variety outing produced by Real People and Laugh-In creator George Schlatter. There are laughs here, but they're woven into some dazzling production numbers—and interrupted for a dramatic break, an original sketch that gives the stars a chance to show the subtlety and sensitivity that have earned each an Oscar.

SUNDAY. Hal Linden's Big Apple (8 ABC) shows that New York is a great place to visit—thanks to well-photographed musical-comedy sequences that travel around Manhattan with host Linden, Robert Guillaume, Shecky Greene and the famed Rockettes.
Victorian England's colorful Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli has been portrayed on the screen by such fine British actors as George Arliss (who won a 1929 Oscar for the role), John Gielgud and Alec Guinness. And in "Disraeli: Portrait of a Romantic" on Masterpiece Theatre (9 PBS), Ian McShane is just as memorable. In the first segment of this four-part biography, the brilliant and opportunistic Disraeli—whose growing fame as a novelist is matched by his dwindling finances—becomes "as obsessed by politics as most men are by drink or women."

MONDAY. In May, New York's Museum of Modern Art opened the largest Picasso retrospective ever assembled in the U.S. Tonight, on Picasso—A Painter's Diary (8 PBS), viewers can appreciate what the fuss is all about, for this splendid documentary by Perry Miller Adato captures the innovative and daring spirit of Picasso's art as well as the flamboyant and egotistical nature of the artist himself (who, seemingly ageless, died in 1973 at 91). The film provocatively depicts how Picasso's numerous wives and mistresses found their way onto his canvases, but it's the master himself who has the best moments here, whether creating in his studio or clowning before the camera.

TUESDAY. An exceptional Happy Days rerun (8 ABC) with more on its mind than just hanging out at Arnold's looks into the attitudes of—and responses to—a paraplegic. In the story, Fonzie reluctantly hires an embittered wheelchair-bound mechanic—who proceeds to antagonize virtually everyone.

WEDNESDAY. A beautifully sung staging of Wagner's "Tannhauser" (8 PBS) boasts an abundance of Great Performances, most notably tenor Spas Wenkoff as the errant knight of the title and, in an unusual tour de force, soprano Gwyneth Jones as two very different lovers, the chaste Elisabeth and the sensuous goddess Venus. Opera lovers had best be warned, though with all its pageantry, this taped production runs a hefty three-and-one-half hours.

In some areas network shows may not be seen on the days and at the times indicated. Times are Eastern.

TV'S FOREIGN POLICY

Charles Collingwood, in his article on foreign correspondents ["Goodbye to All That," April 19], explained in a nutshell what has happened to the American people regarding foreign [news]: the foreign correspondents are not allowed to be the experts they once were. In the past, one could rely on them for information on important issues and on a foreign country's attitude toward ourselves and others. Today, we have lost sight of the importance of the rest of the world to us. I, for one, would like to see these journalists returned to their specialized work and have them once again as a much-needed, dependable source of information.

UP FRONT ABOUT NUDITY

I am surprised that CBS officials were shocked by a [nude] scene from "Gauguin the Savage" ["TV Update," May 3]. Don't they ever watch their daytime dramas? I find much more to be offended at in them than anything in the story of Gauguin.

Edna M. Russmann
Oak Lawn, Ill.

The networks are still playing that old bigotry game with the American public: if the woman is dark, no objections to nudity, but, if she's white, no way. Why is it that shows like Roots or "Gauguin the Savage" can get the censor's OK, while movies like "Coming Home" or "Looking for Mr. Goodbar" get or will get the censor's ax? I'm not saying we should have nudity all over TV, but let us get rid of this stupid idea that when nudity is being considered, only dark-skinned women need apply.

RATTLING THE OPPOSITION

Just a note of praise for Mark Ribowsky's delightful article "Scoring from the Dugout" [May 3]. It certainly proved that baseball is still a kid's game. From Little Leaguers who chant things like "Pitcher's blowing up—boom!" to Dick Drago's sophisticated "bat-smashing," baseball players know the value of rattling the opposition. I'm constantly amazed at players who let any sort of taunts get to them—whatever happened to the art of concentrating on the game itself?

JAIL-HOUSE BLUES

In regard to your editorial on Prisoner: Cell Block H [May 3], you did nothing but condemn the series. Yes, I will agree it contains nothing but violence, homosexuality and tough-talking convicts, but what do you think prison life is? At least it's one series that gives the facts, and as a mother of a 14-year-old daughter, I believe teens should watch the show. In fact, Cell Block H is no worse than "Scared Straight!", which was even shown in schools.

H. Hapersberger
Pittston, Pa.

Call me a sadistic degenerate, but I found your views of Prisoner: Cell Block H grossly unfair. I do agree that this show is not at all appropriate for late-afternoon viewing, but it certainly doesn't deserve words like "ugly" and "tasteless." I see on the prime-time TV schedule the umpteenth teen-age prostitute flick. That is my opinion of "trash."

David Cerda
Hammond, Ind.

Three cheers for your editorial on Prisoner: Cell Block H. Although my family has not suffered through the show itself, we have been subjected to its tasteless commercials throughout the day. How do I explain to my 6-year-old "why Lynn may have buried her baby"? Let's send the commercials "down under" along with the show!

Sunday, NBC	The Great Smokey Roadblock	Thursday, NBC	Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar & Grill

Tuesday, CBS	Siege

It's seasonal wind-down time, with one newcomer and a mixed bag of repeats this network-movie week.

The lone premiere does, in fact, play like a repeat or a mixed bag of all those early '70s disillusioned-cop-vs.-narcotics-biggie melodramas. A 1974 British-French co-production with British and French stars and an American leading man as well as a change of title for American audiences, The Destructors (shown in Europe as "The Marseille Contract") played here as the bottom half of a double bill. Written by Judd Bernard and directed by Robert Parrish, it offers us Anthony Quinn as head of the American Narcotics Bureau in Paris, out to get James Mason, head of a drug-smuggling syndicate. Along the convoluted way Quinn is involved with Maurice Ronet, a French police Inspector, and Michael Caine, a former Quinn pal turned hit man. And amid the double-dealing and corpses, we aficionados of that '70s genre know that a man's gotta take the law into his own hands to get justice done. It's gloom time—but at very least, if Paris and the Marseilles waterfront aren't on your summer travel agenda, you can revel in their scenic beauty courtesy of Douglas Slocombe's lovely cinematography.

Two theatrical films are on their second run, both with special appeal for the Car Crash and Smash crowd but one with special quality of its own. 1978's The Great Smokey Roadblock, written and directed by John Leone, formerly titled "The Last of the Cowboys," stars Henry Fonda and, as always, he makes his vehicle (in this case an 18-wheeler) worth watching. Aging and ailing, Fonda is determined to make one last cross-country run. With the aid of Robert Englund as a hitchhiker, and Eileen Brennan as an old flame, Fonda makes it to a smashing climax that will touch the heart—and delight demolition fans. 1977's Grand Theft Auto is like an endless demolition derby with class—in case you've always wanted to see a Rolls-Royce and other deluxe cars smashed. Ron Howard, coauthor and director as well, and Nancy Morgan are on hand as runaway lovers and it's chase time all the way.

Six made-for-television movies are also on the repeat list. For starters—and it starts off in sizzling fashion—1978's Secrets of Three Hungry Wives is a lushly produced, suspenseful whodunit. Zillionaire playboy James Franciscus is murdered in his lush Manhattan pad by an unidentifiable woman. Cut to Connecticut, where three women are dining and mulling over the murder, each in flashback recalling her relations with Franciscus, a "pathological misogynist" who felt that "glaciers are the only peaks worth scaling." Is it Jessica Walter, Gretchen Corbett or Heather MacRae who pulled the trigger? The script's witty, the plotting credible, the performances first-rate and the solution a zinger.

For serious contemporary drama, 1978's Siege offers an engrossing close-up of elderly residents in an urban housing development terrorized by young and vicious hoodlums. The focus is on Sylvia Sidney and Martin Balsam, neighbors who have become lovers, and Dorian Harewood, "one very bad dude," leader of the toughs. The various facets of survival—passivity, compromise, defiance—are considered with intelligence and compassion and a final bitter irony.

1979's Amateur Night at the Dixie Bar & Grill is strictly from situation-comedy material, its story encompassed by the title. Its saving grace, however, courtesy of writer-director Joel Schumacher, is that some good performers give the stereotypes personalities and appeal. Louise Latham and Victor French as the bar owners; Melinda Naud, Ed Begley Jr., Pat Ast and Timothy Scott among the amateurs; and a Dixie Bar audience that will sit still—and even applaud—for anything make the film entertaining on its own lowbrow level.

1977's Behind the Badge, on its second run (titled "A Killing Affair" on its first), fades with time, the pussyfooting approach to the interracial romance between detective-partners Elizabeth Montgomery and O.J. Simpson becoming more obvious and the police-vs.-criminal-justice problems becoming almost clichéd. But this time take special note of Rosalind Cash as Simpson's wife, and Dolph Sweet as the couple's superior: they're very good indeed.

And finally two ersatz action-adventure flicks dull out the schedule. 1979's Captain America, Part I, is strictly for kiddies and motorcycle freaks, with Reb Brown a wooden hero. 1979's Billion Dollar Threat is clunking imitation-Bond, with villainous Patrick Macnee the only pleasure amid the plodding plotting.

DISRAELI: PORTRAIT OF A ROMANTIC, PART 1

Ian McShane and Leigh Lawson

Ian McShane stars as Benjamin Disraeli (1804-81) in this four-part biography of the British statesman.

As the drama opens, Disraeli's reputation is chiefly that of a dilettante. A well-known novelist whose speech and dress are as romantically extravagant as his writings, "Dizzy" (who's still in his 20s) seems mostly taken with the wealth and women of London society. His politics? "Depends who I'm talking to," he says. But in this episode, he begins talking seriously about standing for Parliament as a "progressive Conservative." It's an ambition hindered by his perpetual indebtedness, his Jewish ancestry and the perception that he is, in the words of his friend Count D'Orsay (Leigh Lawson), "part genius, part dandy and part actor."

Written by David Buler ("Lillie").

PICASSO—A PAINTER'S DIARY
7 PM (15)
8 PM (8)

PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST IN HIS OWN WORDS

Special: "My work," said Pablo Picasso, "is my diary. For those who know how to read I have painted my autobiography." That Picasso's life and art were so closely intertwined is illustrated by this superb documentary produced and directed by Perry Miller Adato which combines newsreels, home movies and photographs (by David Douglas Duncan) with glimpses of the master's works and reminiscences by friends, relatives, scholars and—most tellingly—Picasso himself (voice by Hector Elizondo) to form a vivid biographical collage.

Included are insights into Picasso's youth and Spanish heritage, the inspiration he drew from African sculpture, his discovery of Cubism, abhorrence of Fascism and repudiation of fame.

The program also explores the influence of the women in his life: Fernande Olivier, who shared his poverty and early success in Paris before World War I; Olga Koklova, the ballerina he married in 1918; photographer Dora Maar, who sparked his activism in the '30s; and painter Francoise Gilot, whose two children by Picasso recall their early years together. (90 min.)

Going from Corporate Vice President To Independent Businessman.

My idea of success used to be a big house, a company car and dining out at Hugo's. Now it's the freedom to make my own business decisions without having to answer to somebody. It's proving to myself that I can run a business successfully.

Dick Levitt held a variety of corporate jobs before joining northAmerican Van Lines as an independent owner operator. A University of Houston graduate, he says that after ten years in the business world, he found his niche in life. "I am my own boss 100%. I run my own business. How much money I make depends on me. And that's a good feeling."

After just one year with northAmerican, Dick Levitt has done alright for himself. So can you. At northAmerican Van Lines, we offer the chance to run your own business — with a big business behind you.

If you can invest between $3400 - $5400, and are 21 or over, you can qualify. The money covers the downpayment on your tractor and interim living expenses during training.

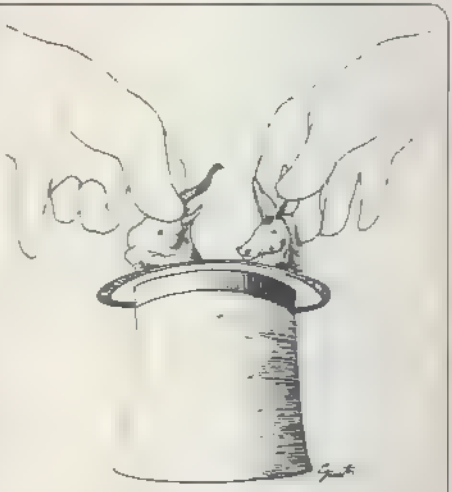
PRIMARY COVERAGE
10:30 PM
ABC, CBS, NBC



Special: The final elections in the longest Presidential-primary season.

"Super Tuesday" is how political observers are characterizing today's balloting because of the large number of delegates at stake—more than one-third of both the 998 needed for nomination at the Republican convention (beginning July 14 in Detroit) and the 1666 needed at the Democratic convention (Aug. 11 in New York City).

The lion's share of those delegates will be contested in California, where 306 Democratic and 168 Republican votes are at stake in today's other primaries. Democrats and Republicans will choose convention delegates in Rhode Island, New Jersey, Ohio, West Virginia, South Dakota, Montana and New Mexico; GOP voters only will go to the polls in Mississippi.

ABC analyzes the voting in an expanded edition of "Nightline" that will run at least one hour. CBS and NBC review the results in scheduled half-hour reports. (Live)

NBC REPORTS
9 PM 2 4 7

IS THERE A BETTER WAY?

Special: Producer Bob Rogers calls this report "an analysis of trends in the 1980 Presidential-nominating process."

Attempts to reform and limit campaign financing may indeed prevent a candidate from "buying" votes, but in this year of proliferating primaries and caucuses, Federal campaign-spending regulations sometimes, says Rogers, result in candidates and their supporters "working 25 times as hard" to raise, account for and target political dollars, thereby reducing their ability to "get their message across to the electorate."

Press coverage doesn't cost the candidate a cent, but it can improve—or diminish—his credibility as a potential victor in November. A segment on the media's "early anointment of winners and losers"—beginning with the Iowa caucuses—includes comments from President Carter's campaign chairman Robert Strauss and John Sears, former campaign director for Ronald Reagan.

The program (in production at press time) also assesses how the primary system may impact on this summer's national conventions. Douglas Kiker is the reporter. (60 min.)

'People like me more than they used to'

Success on 'Vega$' has helped Bart Braverman surmount career and personal problems

By Ellen Torgerson Shaw

Bart Braverman was so obnoxious when he was a child that he was kicked out of the Cub Scouts at age 9. Nor was he popular in high school. By his own account, neither his peers nor his teachers were crazy about him. "I talked a lot," he says. "I caused trouble. I could see the teachers were think- → ing, 'That little s.o.b.' " There was, however, one exception—Bart's science teacher. She found him absolutely hysterical.

"You always pick the right moment to be funny," she told him. "You time your jokes brilliantly, just when class is breaking up!"

"Gee, thanks," said Bart, overwhelmed.

"But you flunk anyway," she said.

"I was always an atrocious student," recalls Bart.

Ah, but the marvelous thing about high school is that it doesn't last more than four years. Now Bart is 34. He is the sweet, puppyish, cuddly slob Binzer in Vega$, gratefully basking in success. The crew—like his science teacher—laughs at his jokes and puns. Robert Urich, the star of the series, thinks Bart is so fine a comic, he should be on Saturday Night Live.

So Bart's tickled purple, right? Yes. And no. Now, he has a good healthy fear that casting directors, an all-powerful group, might continue to see him as "the adorable pushover," in his words. He longs to play heavies and husbands and creeps and monsters and lovers and Willy Loman. In fact, he did lose a role in a recent TV episode because a casting director thought he was "too innocent."

"Have you ever seen anyone look less innocent than me?" he demands. Yes. Binzer may take some living down. But Bart recalls with pleasurable fervor the splenetic Iago he did in college—and his Judas in "Godspell." In fact, just about the only thing Binzerlike about Bart is his relaxed wardrobe; he tends to favor T-shirts, jeans and a baseball cap.

Unlike most actors who are regulars in the second season of a television series and complain about the torture of it all, Bart sends daily thanks heavenward in his joy at being fully employed.

"I sit in bed and think, 'I can't believe this is really happening to me!' " he says. "The year before I took the show [1977], I made $4000 for the whole year, acting." Now he happily makes thousands of dollars a week—all of which he sends to his business manager to invest. Bart lives on the $50-a-day expenses he receives as a member of the Vega$ cast. That pays for his gas, his movie dates, tape cassettes and the miscellany of anything from a box of pencils to a new pair of socks.

But Braverman does have an apartment at the beach, a silver BMW and a car stereo that, turned up to a decibel level he favors, is like sitting inside a kettledrum while the orchestra plays the "1812 Overture."

Bart is clearly thrilled to do things most actors say yeecchhh to: like being King of the Mardi Gras in Pensacola, Fla., last February. When he picked up his brown Mardi Gras tuxedo from a tuxedo-rent'em place in Hollywood, he pointed to a buttercup-yellow shirt he was going to wear, ruffled to the eyeballs. Laughing, he said, "If you're going to be king—be king."

Actually Bart has worked as an actor fairly steadily since he was 5 years old, jobbing in one series after another. Bart's father, Herb Braverman, was a producer at NBC; Bart's mother, Kendall Carly Browne, is an actress. One day, when Bart was 5 and his brother, Chuck, was 7, she was working in The Ed Wynn Show. Kendall heard they were looking for kids to wear Western gear, sashay up to a bar and order jiggers of milk.

"I asked them, Chuck and Bart, if they'd like to try out," Kendall recalls. "They said, 'Yes, yes, take us, take us'." From then on, Bart appeared in I Love Lucy, The Jack Benny Show, The Red Skelton Show, The Bob Hope Show and Have Gun, Will Travel.

The Bravermans were a busy, active and very happy family until Herb Braverman died of a heart attack when Bart was 12. "It was getting through one day at a time after that," says →

Bart. Even now, 22 years later, Bart talks about his father emotionally.

After his graduation from high school in Los Angeles in 1963, Bart attended the College of San Mateo in Northern California. Naturally, he was in the drama department, and when they decided to put on "Othello," he tried out for a part. On the advice of his professor, he auditioned for Roderigo, who says "What, ho" frequently. But there was another chap trying out for Roderigo, so Bart read Iago to the other guy's Rodengo. "I saw the professor take off his glasses. I knew I had him.

"Next year I was Mr. Hotsy-Totsy," he says. Then he dropped out of college for a semester—"I hated school, hated college"—returned to Los Angeles and played pool. Thence back to college, later to a new one. "I was privileged to fall in with a group of motivated actors and a wonderful, maniac director." Afterward, Bart and the wife he met on campus, Patricia (they are now divorced), went to Pittsburgh. Bart had a scholarship to Carnegie Tech (now Carnegie-Mellon) and Patricia supported them (he returned the favor when he got a job).

From Carnegie—he graduated this time—Bart went on to New York and a role in "Godspell." "I was so happy, I laughed all the way to work in the subway. I had a smash role in a smash play." That glory lasted six months. "I was then unemployed for a year and a half." Bart moved to San Francisco, did three more months in the road company of "Godspell," and came down to Los Angeles for "The Rocky Horror Show." Then virtually nothing for three years. "I worked for my brother Chuck." Having abandoned acting at age 13, Chuck has his own film-production company and gave his brother odd jobs as a soundman, editor and writer.

Bart also appeared with an improvisational group, "War Babies," in a Hollywood theater—something he still does, on Wednesday nights, when he isn't working in Vega$.

The role of Binzer was initially conceived only for the pilot, not for the series itself. "Bart's scene in the pilot was the best thing we've ever done," Urich says, taking a moment out from jumping rope in the rain on a 20th Century-Fox back lot to talk warmly about his series companion. "It came from the freedom we immediately felt with each other to improvise. The scene sparkled and jumped out."

Quite so. Bart is a jesting gentleman who always has something humorous to say, who makes a joke as soon as the director yells, "Cut," who could probably make a Druid giggle. Little of what he says translates well into print, unfortunately. (Chatting away on a game show recently, the emcee asked Bart about his new, bad-hombre beard. "Didn't you know," said Bart, "they're doing a remake of 'Captain Blood'?" "Oh," replied the emcee. "Do you have a part in it?" "No," said Bart.)

Bart's charm comes from what his science teacher recognized: a sense of timing coupled with an ability to deliver a line comically.

But Bart's mother says, "Bart was always funny, funny, funny, funny, funny." That's not new. What is new is his present accord with other humans.

"People do like me more than they used to," he says. "I was more abrasive. Now I don't feel the need to joke all the time [although he does do it]. I can afford to be vulnerable." He pauses. "What am I talking about? I am vulnerable."

All the more so because he's taking chances. He is writing story ideas for Vega$; he is planning a nightclub act for the real Vegas and he owns the screen rights to an unpublished novel written by a friend of his.

Still, he has only one genuine fear: "My greatest concern is that Johnny Carson will go off the air before I can get on the show." END

'Picasso—A Painter's Diary'

Adventurous in his work, compulsive in his drive, the fiery Spanish interloper made Paris the capital of modern art

By James R. Mellow

["Picasso—A Painter's Diary" will be telecast on PBS Monday, June 2, in most areas. See "Sports and Specials" in program section for time and channel.]

Everything about Pablo Picasso—except his physical stature—was on the grand scale his ambition, his artistic achievement, his appetite for life and work. No artist in the 20th century—or against such odds—managed to realize his dreams as completely as Picasso did. Few of the great modern French masters—Matisse, Léger or Braque—achieved the extraordinary public and financial success that came to the stocky, virile, fiery-eyed Spanish interloper who settled in Paris in 1904 at the age of 23 and proceeded to make it the capital of modern art.

It was Picasso who invented cubism, the single most influential style in 20th-century art. It was Picasso who pioneered the development of collage. It was Picasso who made art out of castaway objects; in his hands a rusted bicycle seat and a pair of handlebars, fastened together, were miraculously transformed into a steer's head—and a new form of sculpture was born. What Picasso did not invent—such as the surrealist style of the 1920s—he simply annexed, producing paintings that outstripped the works of his surrealist colleagues, including his Spanish compatriot Salvador Dali.

He had a voracious eye; nothing in the history of art was either safe or sacred once Picasso had cast his glance upon it. He was a man jealous of every accomplishment and of every reputation—even the reputations of the long-buried masters of the past. Partly as comic invention but mostly in dead earnest, he produced parody versions of masterpieces by Velázquez, Delacroix and Manet. It was partly out of rivalry with his great 18th-century countryman Goya—and Goya's "The Disasters of War," those morose etchings that depict the brutality of man's inhumanity to man—that Picasso created his mural "Guernica," the single most famous antiwar statement by any artist in the 20th century. →

Picasso did this self-portrait in 1901

James R. Mellow wrote "Charmed Circle: Gertrude Stein & Company."

Throughout his perennially youthful career, Picasso was the artist who abandoned styles, past successes, studios, wives and mistresses—compelled by some inner restlessness. He took risks. In his early, vulnerable years, living in near-poverty in the dilapidated rabbit-warren of an apartment building known as the "Bateau Lavoir" (so-called because it resembled a Seine laundry boat), he gave up his Blue and Rose Period styles—the pictures of lonely guitar players and wistful clowns and acrobats—that had begun to win him much-needed clients. He turned to cubism and lost his patrons—with the exception of the eccentric expatriate American writer Gertrude Stein, who still had faith in his work. For Picasso, every challenge was an opportunity to stake out new territories for himself; he designed sets and costumes for the ballet, illustrated the books of his poet-friends, wrote poetry and plays himself.

His love affairs were as unpredictable and varied as his art. There was Fernande Olivier, the sloe-eyed mistress of his Montmartre days, who loved hats and expensive perfumes; and the frail and gentle Marcelle Humbert, the "Eve" whose name he wrote, like a schoolboy, in his early cubist paintings. There was Olga Koklova, the prim Russian ballerina whom he married in 1918 and who insisted upon a proper middle-class existence that took him away from his bohemian friends. (They were separated in 1935.) There was his voluptuous blonde mistress, Marie-Thérèse Walter, whom he sculpted in the surrealist manner, in plaster and bronze. His interest in women was never diminished by time. In his older years, there would still be attractive women: the photographer Dora Maar; the statuesque young Sorbonne student Françoise Gilot; and, finally, the darkly handsome and steel-willed Jacqueline Roque Hutin, 45 years his junior, whom he married in 1961. All of them, in one fashion or another, were commemorated in his work. Critics have observed with some justice that Picasso's dramatic shifts of style were often synchronized with changes in mistresses.

When life became too complicated and his studio overcrowded with his ceaseless productions, Picasso simply moved elsewhere and began all over again. One of his many studios in Paris was on the Rue des Grands-Augustins, where he painted "Guernica" and where he lived and worked throughout the Nazi occupation, though he was forbidden by the Germans to exhibit. And after the war, there were the well-publicized villas in Southern France: La Galloise in the sleepy town of Vallauris (where Picasso revived an entire ceramics industry simply by deciding to paint the local pottery), the extravagant and ugly villa La Californie in Cannes and the medieval Château de Vauvenargues.

Yet, this indomitabel artist, full of life and vitality, was the man for whom the very mention of death was a forbidden subject. Friends, dealers, lackeys and lovers could make no mention of a will; there could never be a suggestion that his ego or his art would not go on forever. His last years were spent in a villa at Mougins, his privacy and his consecration to work jealously guarded by Jacqueline. When he died on April 8, 1973, at 91, the news went around the world like a shock wave. His estate—a massive collection of his own paintings and sculptures, saved over the years; and the cluttered apartments, villas and chateaus, all worth millions—would be the subject of legal battles among his widow and his four children by a former wife and former mistresses. But the French government would take the lion's share in place of death duties, providing a museum—to be opened in 1982—to house the wealth it had acquired from the artist who had arrived in Paris as a poverty-stricken young man early in the century.

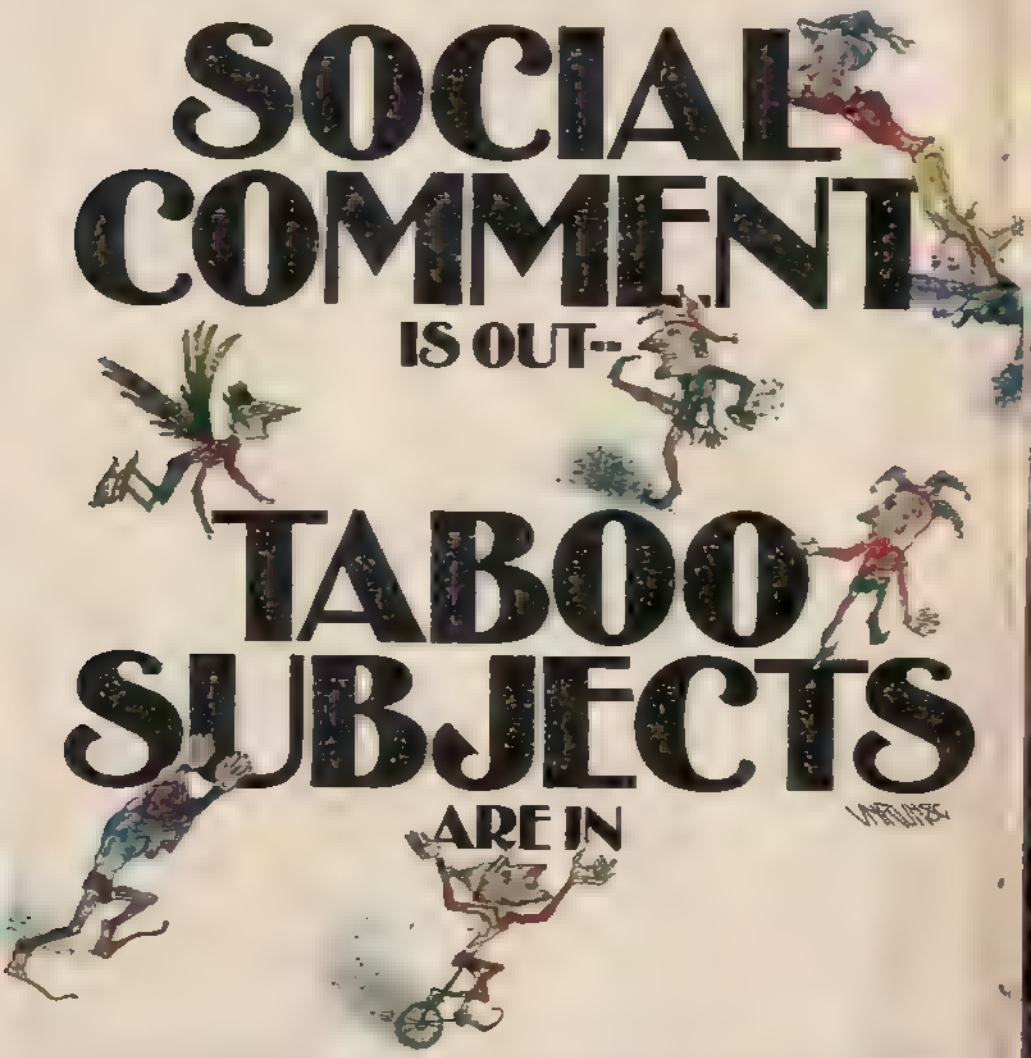
SOCIAL COMMENT IS OUT-- TABOO SUBJECTS ARE IN



A look at where comedy series are headed in the 1980s

By Jeff Greenfield

As a politician might put it, the situation comedy is at a crossroads.

It has been liberated from the frozen stereotypes of bumbling fathers, scatterbrained wives, and the unrelenting sugarcoated cheeriness of a fantasy world where the most serious problems are what Mom will do with the burned roast, now that the boss is coming over for dinner, and whether Sis will get Chuck to take her to the prom if she's still wearing her braces.

For every ham-handed sitcom such as The Misadventures of Sheriff Lobo, or Three's Company or The Dukes of Hazzard, there are funny, tough-minded weekly efforts (Alice and WKRP In Cincinnati, Taxi and *M*A*S*H* and Barney Miller) where first-rate performances match first-rate scripts, where human beings touch our funnybone—and evoke more somber emotions—by being true to the lives we really lead.

At the same time, whether because of changing audience tastes or changing network demands, the no-holds-barred spirit of the early '70s, exemplified by Norman Lear's All In the Family and Maude, has faded; rarely do we hear sitcom characters grappling with issues of race, poverty, war and peace, economics. Comedy characters have reflected more personal maturity, but less curiosity about the world around them.

Will the next few years offer us a different kind of comedy? The television community is divided on that point, but the tentative consensus is that a new wave of change may be coming.

"The networks really are not afraid of taboos any more," says a well-placed television agent. "At least two of them are developing comedies about gay roommates. Nobody's saying, 'You can't do that' any more, whatever that is." The continuing popularity of the sometimes outrageous Saturday Night Live—which pulled respectable prime-time audiences with one-hour repeats of the late-night show—has helped prove that mass audiences have a wider tolerance than was once assumed.

Producer Garry Marshall, who this season introduced serious themes, primarily about the handicapped, on such light shows as Laverne & Shirley, Happy Days and Mork & Mindy, is now developing a new comedy, The Easy Life, which will feature a paraplegic and a blind man as regular characters.

"It's not about handicaps," Marshall says. "They just happen to be handicapped. The networks still want a 'high-profile,' easily promotable show, but maybe they really think the audience is ready for new subjects."

Larry Gelbart, whose struggling new series United States offers an acute, sometimes unsettling, view of contemporary marriage, recognizes NBC's willingness to risk a "definite departure": he was given a commitment to a series without a pilot and without such sacrosanct devices as a laugh track—but is generally not optimistic about the form.

"The sitcom is not a vital form for me," he says. "It can be energetic and alive, but valuable? No. They have become mindless. They just aren't as original as All in the Family and the early ones were. But people aren't tuning them out, and the networks will continue to put them on the air."

One clear-cut recent development that has won a measure of audience acceptance is the so-called "dramedy" or "com-dram"—a blend of drama and laughs as in Eight Is Enough and Trapper John, M.D. While it has proven a source of character growth—Lou Grant came out of The Mary Tyler Moore Show as a comedy-drama and is now enmeshed weekly in serious journalistic crises—most of the comedy creators are skeptical of this form's utility.

"That's not winning prime-time fare," says MTM chief Grant Tinker. "I don't think of drama with comedy as serious—there's nothing encouraging."

"I haven't seen any really successful, creative 'com-drams'," says Lou Grant's Gene Reynolds. "The ratings are good, but I think it's a terrible hybrid. Comedy just doesn't stretch easily into an → hour, because you have to get too heavy for the story and that fights the comedy."

Fundamentally, however, it may be a mistake to look to forms as the clue to what situation comedy will be like in the future. The family gathered around the dinner table is, after all, among the oldest sitcom forms we have; but it was this form that sparked some of All in the Family's most memorable moments. The plot lines of Mork & Mindy are, in general, less than dazzling. But the show works because it is a frame in which a brilliant improvisational comedian, Robin Williams, is allowed to demonstrate his comic gifts. Soap is special not because there's anything ground-breaking about the families of two sisters, but because the characters are driven by compulsions and obsessions; they are not required to be squeaky clean and thoroughly likable—to us or to each other.

We need to look, instead, at what demands will be placed on the networks themselves that will lead them down different paths. As Bridget Potter, recently departed as an ABC programming vice president, notes, "You have to look at needs and time slots. If ABC needs more new 8 o'clock shows, for example, that means appealing more to kids and teen-agers—and they like strong, broad, physical comedy. If you're looking to later times, that means more 'adult' themes and characters."

There is also the expanding growth of cable, pay cable and home entertainment (videocassette recorders and videodisc players), which may well force networks to look for new sources and forms of comedy.

"I'm not sure what the impact of alternative programming will be," says producer Gene Reynolds, "but cable will be more eclectic, less structured. And the networks will have to make adjustments." At the least, the uncensored language and material now available to more than six million pay-cable subscribers will almost certainly make networks a little less cautious about what can be done in broadcasting.

Finally, there is the fact that audiences themselves have grown up with television.

"The generation controlling the sets —the 18-49-year-olds—have grown up with the tube," says Garry Marshall. "They're not dazzled by it the way their parents were, and they're looking for innovation within it."

Will they get it? Is Grant Tinker right when he says, "The audience doesn't seem to care; it seems to be going backwards"? Or is Bridget Potter right when she says, "I don't know how comedy will be different in the next two or three years, but it will be different."

In part, it is up to the audiences whether the cheap laugh and the tight-T-shirt-and-shorts humor will stay popular, or whether the taste for more subtle humor will prevail.

In part, it is up to the networks. One of the most important lessons of the last decade is that the genuinely different comedies need time to win over an audience. All in the Family, The Mary Tyler Moore Show, *M*A*S*H*, Barney Miller were not instant hits. Because they moved at a different pace, because they showed more complicated characters and ideas, audiences had to get used to them. In the frenetic rush for instant ratings, the networks may well lose sight of the fact that, as Tinker says, "The material will work if the audience is allowed to find it."

Critics like to talk about the "Golden Age of TV Drama" of 25 years ago. The fact is that, in situation comedy, some of the strongest shows ever seen are on right now—and so are some of the silliest. When three networks try to tickle funnybones in 76.3 million households, there is no one style or level they can rely on. So there is no special "kind" of comedy we'll be watching in the years to come—just a lot of it. END

ROBERT FOXWORTH and ANTHONY HOPKINS will play the apostles PETER and PAUL in "The Acts of Peter and Paul," a four-hour, two-part drama for CBS. CHRISTOPHER KNOPF has written the script . . . The National Endowment for the Arts is awarding a $100,000 grant to station WETA-TV to develop a four-part PBS series on photography, called The Photographer's World. The one-hour segments will cover the history of photography . . . HOWARD HESSEMAN of WKRP in Cincinnati will go from disc jockey to dentist in his lead role in "Honky-Tonk Freeway." It's a theatrical comedy, directed by JOHN SCHLESINGER, about a small town that is bypassed by a highway.

VALERIE HARPER plays a woman who cannot face her husband's terminal illness in "The Shadow Box," an upcoming ABC production of the Pulitzer Prize-winning play by MICHAEL CRISTOFER. Directed by PAUL NEWMAN, the play also stars JOANNE WOODWARD and CHRISTOPHER PLUMMER. "It's a play about living in the moment," Miss Harper told us. "Paul is a wonderful director, and, unlike the way you have to work in sitcoms, we were able to rehearse for weeks." Though busy making films, the actress sometimes misses playing Rhoda. "I've seen a lot of Rhodas all over New York," she said. "I think the show was a success because it was real. When JULIE KAVNER and I hacked away at frozen brownies, it was something both of us had actually done."

Hollywood

Before returning for another season on The Waltons, RALPH WAITE took the lead role in "Angel City," a CBS movie about a poor West Virginia family's struggle to survive the harsh life in a transient workers' camp . . . MONTE MARKHAM, RUTA LEE and VITO SCOTTI are scared by spooks who haunt a 100-year-old military academy in "The Ghosts of Buxley Hall," an NBC movie special on Disney's Wonderful World next season . . . Former Dallas Cowboys quarterback ROGER STAUBACH won't be on the field with his teammates next season, but there's a good chance he'll be looking down on them from the press box. Roger has joined CBS's lineup of football analysts.

HERE'S BOOMER

This NBC series is pure schmaltz, and I know I am being manipulated every time that cute little dog comes galumphing along and befriends a lonely old man or a sick child. But I go all squishy inside, like the rest of the mushheads out there.

Well, there is schmaltz and there is schmaltz. Good schmaltz is done by people who know they are pulling your strings, but are pulling their own, too; they have a squishy side themselves. Bad schmaltz is simply calculated, and done with both eyes on the cash register. Here's Boomer is good schmaltz.

Boomer is the wandering hero, the dog who never returns, who trots into the lives of troubled folk, gives them a big slurpy dollop of puppy love, and helps them straighten out their problems. He is sort of a shaggy Mary Worth.

If the dog doesn't get you, the little kids will. A 6-year-old girl, thought to be retarded, wandered away from a school outing and was lost until Boomer found her and took her on some adventures before returning her home. It turned out the girl's trouble was hearing loss, not retardation, as was discovered when she couldn't hear Boomer's bark. The tearful parents took her to a clinic. Boomer is a dog's best friend, too. When a sweet old hillbilly died and left his faithful mutt whimpering at graveside, Boomer helped the grieving animal find a new life as companion to a blind pooch owned by Fionnula Flanagan. The lonesome Miss Flanagan also found romance (sniffle).

Boomer is not quite in the Lassie or Rin Tin Tin mold, being more a lover than a fighter. He never attacks anyone, and is reluctant when it comes to physical derring-do, like sliding down a slide. He prefers light mischief and trickery, like stealing an orange for a hungry tot—though, in an episode about dognapers, he did help a boy set free a flock of captured dogs, right under the hoodlums' noses. When that boy took off with those happy mutts, there wasn't a dry eye in the house . . . my house, anyway. Boomer apparently understands English; when he hears his name in a television news report, he barks to identify himself. I presume he's housebroken, though it never comes up.

The love of a good dog is all most people need to solve their problems, we gather. A show that can sell us a proposition like that, even for half an hour, must be plucking the right strings. Like all good wandering heroes, Boomer moves on at the end of each story. As the theme song goes: "Like magic he appears/A hero to save the day/ And just when you think he's here for good/That's when he goes away."

I have a fluffy dog named Holly who understands no English and has never been known to help anyone do anything. I open the door and say, "Why don't you go out and have some adventures? Go rescue a lost kid or something. Do some traveling, see the world." But she just shrugs and goes on chewing up my socks. Something to do with her upbringing, I suppose. END
